Adheseal is surprisingly easy to apply for an in-water product! The applicator gun would be something a diver could easily use even in black-water with cold, gloved hands; which seems to be most civils projects nowadays! Plus the sealant itself didn't disintegrate in the water like most do. It was easily pliable and a small amount went a long way. I've got to say I was quite impressed with the strength and its rate of curing in the water. It would have come in handy on the last project we were on with the making-good of some gate valve seals actually!

I'm sure we will find it many commercial uses.
